

Parents want the best for their children.

Loving and caring is not enough to help them understand and manage external influences or help them develop the strength of character to avoid risky behaviour.

This requires a more conscious approach.

What we do as parents does matter.

Modern educators recognise the need for a new approach to learning how to live peacefully and harmoniously together.

Research shows that children with strong moral and ethical character succeed in both school and life*

The new national Australian Curriculum now includes Ethics.

Key questions for any parent

- Are you overwhelmed at the responsibility of instilling your child with life-skills to assist them to become capable adults who fulfil their potential?
- Do you feel inadequately equipped to guide your child safely through the pitfalls and challenges they regularly encounter?
- Would access to up to date, reputable guidelines on developing moral and ethical behaviour be reassuring?

Most parents answer a resounding “YES”

What is...

IQ+EQ+SQ = A Winning Solution?

IQ = Intelligence Quotient

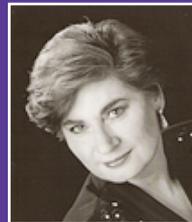

Used to solve logical problems.

EQ = Emotional Quotient

Used to solve problems that require empathy, motivation and compassion.

SQ = Spiritual Quotient

Used to solve problems of meaning, purpose, value and relationships.

Dr Arini Beaumaris, an international educational leader and consultant, developed this groundbreaking formula and life-changing tool kit.

Designed to bring about moral and ethical behaviour in young children, this approach resulted from research and successful experience as Principal of an international secondary school in Canada, where 64% of her students were placed on the British Columbian Government's Honours Roll.
